

October 2, 2026

Dear Mayor Brandon Johnson,

We are a group of Chicago arts and culture leaders and supporters writing on behalf of the creative sector across Chicago. We recognize the challenges of the current budget season, but believe investment in the arts should be a key part of Chicago's FY2027 economic strategy. As you recently told WBEZ, "You don't cut your way towards prosperity. You invest towards prosperity." We agree.

More than 2,126 artists, cultural leaders, organizations, and supporters from across Chicago have joined us in signing this letter.

Together, we urge the City of Chicago to restore DCASE grantmaking to our historic 2023 peak of $23.5 million, with an increase to the DCASE budget of $15 million. Returning to this level of investment would provide $8.70 in funding per resident, which is in line with New York City's per resident community cultural grantmaking.

DCASE's direct grantmaking programs serve as a key source of support for our neighborhoods. And the Chicago arts sector continues to be impacted by federal policies that harm local cultural organizations, limit direct investment in the arts, and attempt to limit free expression and the creativity at the soul of our democracy.

Arts Alliance Illinois' latest report shows that the creative sector is the city's third largest industry. It represents 11.3% of the city's economy, supports 212,875 jobs, and generates $50 billion in economic output and $5.7 billion in tax revenue. Funding the arts means funding jobs, businesses, and economic activity citywide. And that report's data comes from 2023, when the city's grantmaking investment was $23.5M.

Chicago is one of the greatest cities in the world, but also the only of the nation's five largest cities to cut funding for its local art agency last year, while New York, Los Angeles, and Phoenix increased theirs.

Government support of arts and culture is felt not only in our theaters, our community art centers, and our studios, but across shared priorities including violence prevention, youth development, education, public health, and community building.

You recently told WBEZ that you want investment in arts and culture to be "the way to define [your] administration." As the City develops its FY27 budget, we ask you to demonstrate that commitment through restoring investment in the artists and cultural organizations that make Chicago great.

Sincerely,

See next page for list of signatories
